DOCTOR CHISHOLM'S
Anti-Bilious Pills,
Of a quality superior to any thing of the kind ever offered as a GENERAL MEDICINE, in this Country.
NOW prepared from a recipe of the celebrated Dr. Chisholm, who, from a long residence in the West-India Islands, has been enabled to favor the world with the most complete history, and most approved methods of curing all the BILIOUS DISEASES of those warm climates.
This extraordinary Medicine, which now for the first time is finding its way into general practice, has properties in the highest degree superior to the mercurial nostrums so frequently recommended by the name of Anti-Bilious Pills. The extraordinary powers of this medicine as a solvent and evacuent of Bile, is without example; never producing debility or injuring the health, in the smallest degree, of the most delicate child or weakly female:
The BILIOUS HEAD-ACHE, so much complained of in this country, and in the neighbourhood of rivers, is often removed by a single dose, which, to a strong man, is only five pills, and to a weakly woman, three. The same dose will generally remove the most excruciating pains of the cholic, like a charm, by abusing the bile to pass downwards in the course of an hour or two.
Two or three Pills taken an hour before dinner, and repeated every third day, will effectually remove those diseases arising from flatulency and indigestion, and by persevering in the use of them for a considerable time, the appetite will be improved, and strength and vigor will return.
Two Pills taken at bed time, with a cup of penny-royal tea, and repeated every second night, will effectually remove Rheumatic pains wherever seated.
A single Pill, taken every fourth hour with a cup of flaxseed tea, will cure Pleurisy, promote expectoration, and relieve coughs and colds.
In CONSUMPTIVE CASES and DISEASES OF THE LIVER, no medicine ever yet discovered, has been known to perform such cures. Two Pills taken every third morning, will be found sufficient, unless costiveness prevails; in which case the dose may be increased according to the strength or constituton.
The Dysentery, Croup, and Summer Complaint on children, are soon relieved by a few doses. A single Pill to a child of 6 years old, and the dose increased according to their strength and age.
In Asthmatic or Phthisical cases, where the laborious breathing and great oppression, with faintings, are fast sinking the patient to the brink of the grave, a few Pills, taking one every hour, with fennel or pepper-mint tea, will often enable the patient to walk about in a few hours.
The above valuable Medicine is Sold ONLY in Pittsburgh, by
J. P. & J. W. SKELTON, at their Wholesale and Retail Apothecary and Drug Store.

His sire was Old North Star, imported from England, and stood in Pittsburgh when this colt was got; his dam was got by the imported Horse Messenger, and is an elegant Mare. Further recommendations are unnecessary, as his size, figure and movement will sufficiently recommend him to all competent judges.

Letter from general Lamarque, to his majesty, Louis XVIII.

SIRE,

Always a stranger to civil dissentions, after passing through 23 years of an honorable and sometimes glorious military life, I now see my name placed in a list of men who have incurred the displeasure of your majesty, and whom you banish from your capital.

Had my career been run in the midst of intrigues, or had I sought to derive support from the different parties, who have in their turn ruled my unfortunate country, I might have been expected to be the victim of such conduct; but I have always resided in camps, have often been persecuted, and the rank to which I have risen, has been acquired by long and difficult services. Convinced that it never came within the province of a soldier to deliberate on the sources of power, I followed my colours, braved death, and considered myself as fulfilling my duty.

Under your majesty's government, I was removed from every employment.—Had the ministers entrusted a part to me, it would have been faithfully maintained, for I never failed in my duties.

If, sire, I have been represented as one of those men, whom the favor of another man created, your majesty has been deceived; I have always belonged to the country.

When your majesty was absent from your kingdom, the command of a division of the army of the north was given me, and it was on the farthest frontier I received the order to repair to La Vendee—to that La Vendee which so many recollections rendered awful. The danger appeared great, but I did not consider it above my courage. Hitherto I had the good fortune not to be engaged in civil wars. I knew that the events of battle were the least dangers to be incurred in such contests, and that the hatred of which a commander becomes the object, poisons the remainder of his life, but I was a soldier and it was my duty to obey.

I flattered myself, that my moderation would disarm those I was summoned to combat, or that the blood which I might spare, would expiate that which I might be condemned to shed.—Less than six thousand men, decorated with the title of an army, were consigned to me, to reduce and keep down an immense population. In such a situation, if moderation had not been my wish, it would have been my policy. I thought it proper to use general menaces, to avoid making particular victims; invested with great powers, I made no use of them, and I never reverted to them except to apply to be relieved from them.

My first object was to endeavor to avoid shedding French blood. On the 3d of June, before passing the Loire, I wrote to the Vendean generals, "I do not blush to ask peace of you, for in civil wars there is no glory except in terminating them." After the only battle which was fought, I wrote to the minister of war—"My heart is torn by the aspect of a field of battle, where only Frenchmen are seen. I shall pursue the Vendeans more by propositions than by my columns."

These propositions were accepted. A war which could have no influence on the destiny of France, which was to be decided on a greater theatre, was terminated within a fortnight after the passage of the Loire, and at that event, the heart of your majesty must have been consoled.

Sire, men whose hopes are always disappointed by peace, and who wish to exaggerate the importance of the war, may calumniate me, but to them the whole population of Vendee will reply, "He conducted the war with humanity. His army left no traces of devastation behind it—our property was respected, our inhabitants preserved, our temples revered. He sent back the prisoner.—He took care of the wounded—He spared us in battle—he restored us to our agricultural labors."

In great political commotions, two distinct descriptions of men always appear. Those of the one, kind, brave, ardent, and generous, rush into danger, the others cowardly and irresolute, wait until the commotion is passed, in order to gather its fruits. I appeal to the testimony of the former: they will give me their suffrage, as they have merited mine. The latter, who are condemned even in their own country, may calumniate me; the justice of a good king, cannot long be deceived.

The war of La Vendee is to me, sire, a title of glory; I not only carried it on humanely, and as if I had read in futurity, that I should one day have to render an account of it to your majesty;—but I had the courage to resist the authority under which I acted, when its commands were opposed to my principles and my conscience.

I was ordered to blow up and destroy the houses of the Vendean chiefs. I disobeyed, and I only marched, detached detachments to protect them. I was directed to set a price on the heads of M. M. La Roche Jaqueline, Sapinaud, &c. and I disobeyed.

I was to have destroyed the bells, and to have carried off hostages. I refused.

I was to have thrown, by arbitrary measures, the expense of the war on the nobles. This I did not do. The property of all was equally protected.

I was directed to condemn and immediately shoot the chiefs which might fall into my hands. I saved them. M. M. de Civral, Dubouchet, &c. were set at liberty. The only blood which flowed, except in battle, was that of my own soldiers, who were restrained by a rigid discipline.

Sire, I even exceeded the bounds of all moderation. At the battle of La Roche Cerviere, three hours after the fire had ceased, M. le Lasseaux, a Vendean, fired a double barrelled carbine at my aid-de-camp and me. According to the laws of war, I was entitled to consider him as an assassin. I rescued him from my soldiers, who wished to sacrafice him, and he still lives.

I need your justice, sire, and I must enlighten it. For the present and the future, I am willing to rely on my past life. I am ready to present it as my defence and as my guarantee. Born of an honorable family, I have derived from them some virtues. I fought under Moreau at Enger, at Maeskirk, at Biberbach, at Hoohsted and at Hohenlinden. Not to mention Austerlitz, Wagram, the perilous siege of Gaeta, the Isle of Capree, which I took from a brave long prepared enemy.

It is of deeds of arms less brilliant, but which have more connexion with my present situation, that I ought to speak. I combated four years in the kingdom of Naples, and I can travel securely from the banks of the Fronto to cape de Spartivento. In the Spanish war, in which so many reputations have been eclipsed, I heard after forty combats, the brave Catalonians recommend me to their king. Let my course be followed thro' the plains of Germany, the rocks of the Pyrenees, the fields of ancient Luconia, the coasts of Greece, and those with whom I combated, as well as those from whom I received hospitality, will repeat my name with honor and sometimes with gratitude.

Reached for the first time by the breath of calumny, regretting not to have died in battle, I retire far from the capital, to which a thousand ties attach me, to live in exile: there I shall continue to form wishes for your majesty—whose virtues, genius and bounty, are so necessary to France. Happy those who defend you, for they also defend the country and liberty.

Sire—Your majesty's most obedient and faithful subject.

Lieut. Gen. MAX LA MARQUE.

From the United States Gazette.

Louis de Frotte, a young gentleman of Lower Normandy, notwithstanding his youth in consequence of his gallantry and military talents obtained the command of the extensive district of Lower Normandy. As he was one of the last chiefs who acceded to the pacification with the regicide consular authority, so he was one of the first to recur to arms on the prospect of rescuing his country from the power of the Corsican despot.—But Gen. Brune with 60,000 men marching into the insurgent departments by specious promises induced the soldiers to desert their chiefs, all of whom submitted except Frotte, who was obliged to withdraw with the officers of his staff and an aid-de camp to a deserted castle in the department of Orne: but his retreat being discovered, himself and companions were arrested. Frotte was tried by a military commission at Verneuil, before whom he exhibited the most undaunted resolution, and calling for a glass of wine gave "Vive le roi!" for a toast. Next day as himself and his followers were conducted on foot to the place of execution, a grenadier observed that he did not keep time; on this he immediately assumed the proper step, and marched as if he belonged to the battalion.

Of the seven officers who perished on this occasion, not one exhibited the least symptom of trepidation: on the contrary they all insisted that their eyes should not be concealed by means of a bandage. The capture and execution of this chieftan was considered by Bonapaarte (then first consul) as the conclusion of the civil war: and he accordingly notified to the legislature "that the portion of French territory which had been put out of the law, was restored to the republic."

Such was the mercy shown to the men who fought in defence of their religion, their legitimate king and their country—Where is the democratic editor who lamented their fall?—and why is it, that Louis XVIII should be branded as a merciless tyrant for punishing Ney who (though undoubtedly a great general) was alike a traitor to his king and his would-be-emperor!

WESTERN BANK OF VIRGINIA.

The subjoined report of a committee of this institution, was enclosed to me by Doctor Spencer. I learn from papers accompanying the report, that the capital stock of this Bank is two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, divided into shares of five hundred dollars each: that seventeen per cent. upon the whole stock is paid in: and that four per cent. is to be paid in annually for two years, and not exceeding five per cent. per annum thereafter, at the discretion of the directors. The stock is stated to be in the hands of a few wealthy and respectable individuals, who contemplate connecting with the Bank, a line of commercial business from Pittsburgh to New Orleans, to aid in the transportation of produce and the conversion of the staple of the western country into some equal medium of exchange for the Atlantic markets.

The suspicions against the credit of this Bank originated from circumstances in the circulation of their paper in Pittsburgh, before the Bank House was opened at Parkersburgh. This was an error, but it is not of itself to destroy the credit which the names of respectable men give to the institution. The publication of this paper was made without any ill will to the Bank, or the individuals concerned. I am sensible of the value of Banking establishments, and I am convinced that all who value them ought to take measures to prevent fictitious paper from imposing upon the uninformed. It was for this purpose the publication was made. It appears that my apprehensions were unnecessary and unfounded. I am glad of it, and I hope all the editors of papers who have published notices of the Bank will do as much as I can to restore the paper of the Bank to its proper credit, by republishing this article and the subjoined report.

WESTERN BANK OF VIRGINIA AT PARKERSBURGH.

20th March, 1816.

Present, JOSEPH SPENCER, President, S. B. Wilson, B. W. Morse, Isaac Beeson, and Alexander H. Creel, Directors.

Ordered, That S. B. Wilson, Isaac Beeson, and Alexander H. Creel, and they are hereby appointed a committee to prepare a report of the condition of the Western Bank of Virginia, as to the solvency thereof.

In compliance with the foregoing order, the committee submit the following

REPORT:

That reports have made their way in a number of newspapers, as to the solvency of the Western Bank of Virginia, and from what this committee can learn those reports originated from false suggestions of persons inimical to the institution, without any known cause, perhaps with a view to injure the credit of the paper for the purpose of speculation, which reports have injured the circulation of the paper of this institution. The committee state, that this Bank and Company are completely solvent, and have at all times redeemed their paper in specie, the capital being two hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the paper that is now emitted from the Bank has in every instance been secured. The stock of this institution has been taken by men of wealth and respectability. This committee therefore report, that the credit of this Bank has been unjustly injured in consequence of said reports, and are fearful that innocent individuals may have been imposed on, which this committee regret. They also report it expedient, for the indemnity of those who hold the paper of the said Bank, that the President and Cashier of this Bank do give public notice of the readiness and disposition of the said company, at all times, to redeem its paper at the Bank. All which is respectfully submitted.

This report is accepted.

JOSEPH SPENCER, Pres't.
JOHN NEAL, Cashier.

PARIS, Jan. 21.

Anniversary of January 21.—"Paris where so many extraordinary events have succeeded each other during the last 25 years, presented yesterday a picture which will never be effaced. On the preceding evening the bells announced, by their mournful sound, the day consecrated to expiatory ceremonies, and in the morning the shops were shut. The quarters inhabited by the indigent classes were those in which this religious duty was observed with not the least exactness. Altogether the mourning dress, the sad and silent gait of the people of every age, sex and profession, who, from a thousand different quarters, repaired to their respective churches, gave to this melancholy day a character of solemn sadness which prepared every heart for the deeper emotions of religion. Such was the spectacle, according to a celebrated historian, which Rome presented, when the widow of a young prince, the hope of the empire, brought into the city his adored ashes. The expression of Tacitus, with its energetic precision, can alone do justice to what we yesterday experienced at Paris: Iris per silentium vastas. It was a day of solitude and desolateness: universal silence seemed to announce the absence of the inhabitants! their return was remarked only by their sighs and prayers, mixed with the hymns and voices of the church.

"About eleven o'clock the funeral solemnities commenced in all the churches of the capital. The single difference consisted in the more or less pomp they could display; but every where reigned the most touching conformity, that of sentiment and pious anxiety. The facades of the churches hung with black, were ornamented with escutcheons of France, and in the choir, the cenotaph was every where surmounted with the crown, the sceptre and the hand of justice; every where also, the national guards, in full uniform, were placed in the nave and around the catafalque.—It would be impossible to say in what part of this immense city zeal and grief were most affectingly depicted: whether at the churches in the opulent and commercial quarters, such as St. Roch, St. Eustache, &c. or at St. Margaret, in the fauxbourg St. Antoine.

"The truly sublime idea of canonizing instead of every other eulogy, (and what other could equal it) the impressive testament of the martyr king to be read, produced all the effect that could have been expected. Every where it was from the pulpit by some ecclesias- of advanced age, and who, doubt- like so many others of the inhabi- of Paris, had been the silent and ected witnesses of the "crime of unfortunate day." Every where inimitable monument of ineffable ness, of heroism of unearthly ori- was listened to with profound self- ction. How many tears of grief admiration flowed during that rgful ceremony! Let us not seek to w whether remorse for having con- ted in any way to the most odious rimes, may not have caused some them to be shed. After the act of inal justice, which has just been ed upon the regicides, whom the se of time and their own furious sions, have still spared, there ought longer to exist in France, but a na- of brothers. Louis XVI. when to ascend to the abodes of bliss, e it: and Louis XVIII. is his tes- entary executor.

The Bishop of Calons sur Seane, for- al aumoner of the Queen of France. ed by a numerous clergy, officiated. the gospel, M. de Caux, Bishop of e, read in a voice changed by pro- emotion, the will of Louis XVI. as read from a manuscript: it was ed of the original, written with the d of the holy monarch himself. ing the sacred office, a battery of non, served by the artillery of the al, was placed outside of St. fired every quarter of an hour. At half past one o'clock this imposing e was finished. At their de- e from church, the princes were ed with universal acclamations of Vive le Roi."

Oliver Wolcott, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, has been nominated by the Democrats of Connecticut, as their candidate for the office of Governor of that state. This man was formerly a Federalist, and was honored with no small portion of the anathemas of Democracy.—He was accused by his present political friends (when Secretary) of burning the books of his office to hide his infamy: yet these same honest democrats are now willing to confer upon him the highest office in their gift as a reward for his aberration from correct principles. We wish them joy of their acquisition. That man, who would make his political principles subservient to his thirst for gain, must have an elastic conscience, and would, if necessity required, stretch a little, his moral honesty.—Let no such man be trusted!

The Steam Boat PIKE, fitted out at Henderson, (Ken.) arrived at Louisville, on the 25th ult. on her way to this place. The Pike performed the trip from Henderson to Louisville, a distance of 250 miles, in sixty-seven hours, against the current.

The Aurora, on the authority of letters received from Washington, is now daily employed in opening a system of fraud, corruption and unblushing venality, which it will be almost incredible to state. The length of these communications, prevents us from inserting them. It is doubtless known to our readers, that at the request of the Post Master General, an enquiry into the concerns of the Post-Office, has been set on foot by the House of Representatives. A committee has been appointed to investigate these matters, who have been for some time employed in this business. Several clerks in the Post Office department, have been examined by this committee, who have been discharged for revealing some instances of fraud, peculation and corruption in that department.

SUMMARY OF FRENCH NEWS.

There has been some commotions at Lyons and other towns in the interior; many arrests had taken place, and depots of arms discovered.

The Abbe Sieyes, according to the law of amnesty, had left France.

Gen. Lavallette was supposed to be in England. A Gen. Lavalle was arrested near Lyons, and sent to Paris, being mistaken from his name for Lavalette.

The king has ventured to the opera, the first theatre in which he had shewn himself since his return.

The royal family of Portugal was expected to return to Europe, and the troops they left in America to join the Spaniards in suppressing the revolutionists.

The Emperor Alexander banished by an Ukase, dated 3d of January, all the Jesuits from his two capitals, they having proved ungrateful and unfaithful subjects, and attempted to make converts from the Greek religion, "the foundation stone of the Russian empire.

THE SCHEDIASM—No. 6.

"Our first years seldom supply that "sober ear which the lessons of Religion "demand; but then every avenue to the "heart is open: and whatever spirit is "introduced into the system, usually "lives, though latent, and animates the "frame forever."

The World without souls.

In dipping my pen into the ink-stand, as the commencement of this sixth number of the Schediasm, I held it there, for a moment, in order to weigh the claim of the subject that might first arrest my attention. The one which occurred, however grave, seeming not on that account, to be excluded from the general title of these lucubrations, I shall not think myself bound to apologise for its insertion.

The great power of habit is proverbial, and it has been said that we are all, somehow or other the children of habit.—Now for the sake of pointing out certain advantages to be derived from so copious a source of instruction, I will adopt it as the foundation of an hypothesis very friendly to a right apprehension of a correct system of education.

Nor do very powerful objections against the validity of the position present themselves to my mind; for the uniformity of association between sensations caused by outward objects and our intellectual operations has become pretty generally acknowledged: insomuch, that a majority of my readers will pardon me for subscribing to the legitimacy of a doctrine which has become quite fashionable;—and indeed I am not unwilling to confess that all the seeming magic of extraordinary dexterity and of mechanical skill springs, for the most part, from the laws of association.—Upon a right understanding of this theory, and a judicious application of its principles depends, in an important degree, the formation of a perfect plan for unfolding the faculties of the human mind.

Waving for the present, the consideration of the main scope of the principle adverted to, I mean to confine my remarks to the probable influence of chimney-corner habits, acquired early in life, upon our conversation at large, upon our business, our pleasures, in a word, the happiness of our declining years.

It will hardly be questioned that children upon quitting school, carry away with them some of the practices and principles prevalent in the seminary or its vicinity. Little as the time may be which many have devoted to the acquisition of the rudiments of knowledge at school, few individuals can be supposed to have withstood all the attempts of the preception; and none, perhaps, will be said to have remained quite stationary. For, could it be ascertained that no alteration, no advancement at all were produced upon the minds of children by being at school, there would be no hope left, in a country where prejudices against common education sufficiently prevail, of ever gaining proselytes to the cause. No new foundations of seminaries would be laid; and those which have been begun might be suffered to moulder away in the original rubbish of their formation.

If then more or less effects are known certainly to result from a few months application of the mind to the study of lessons delivered during a few hours of the day, and that too, as is sometimes the case, in direct opposition to the prevailing customs of home, does it not follow, as demonstratively clear that the inculcation of exact notions of moral propriety cannot be too much encouraged? If by rowing against the stream of native corruption, during six hours of the four and twenty, perceptible motion be imparted to the bark which is laden with our greatest treasure, how ought we to tug during the other portion of our time to prevent the current from carrying us back to the very shoals which we have been endeavouring to escape!

With this figure strongly impressed upon the imagination, I turn the eye of observation to the chimney corner at home. Where else ought we to expect to find so much auxiliary support of school discipline? and where else ought we to fear a counter current so capable of baffling every effort of salutary admonition?—At home then are we to look for that co-operative agency which is essential to the growth of a virtuous character. For though the teacher at school may plant the seed and the common outdoor avocations of life water it, yet the increase will be regulated by the associations formed at the domestic fireside.

It is to be feared that those parents who neglect to lay the ground-work of decency and order in their own families are not sufficiently sensible of that responsibility which is naturally interwoven with parental authority. To suffer the first years of a child's life to elapse without special regard to the justness of early association-, and afterwards to call in the aid of adventitious instruction, is more than mere folly. And the licentious part of the rational creation, may, perhaps, be said to be only drinking of that cup of bitterness which the inattention of their parents has prepared for them.—So infatuated too are many as not to perceive, that whilst they are loudly calling for a reformation of the world, and neglecting the proper business of their own chimney corners, they are demanding little less than miraculous power to perform impossibilities.

According to the homely maxim of judging of the pudding by the eating of it, christians are bound to suspect the efficacy of their reforming exertions wherever the conversation and practices of their own chimney corners shall continue to be at variance with order and decorum. There the characters of those who are shortly to step on the stage of active life, are composed, and according to the associations formed by the children now, will be the purity of the manners and morals of the general community ten or fifteen years hence. TO THE RECLUSE.

OH leave not the harp, while thy magic of song
Enraptures my heart as it sighs o'er the strain;
Far dearer its sounds, than the voice of the throng
That lavishes praise on the artful, or vain;
How sweetly the music of sympathy flows,
When wak'd by the soft touch of nature and feeling,
Then leave not the harp, to its mournful repose
But listen to Mary of Erin's appealing.

I blush at thy homage; for reason declares
How feeble my effort, how humble my lay,
Though genius were mine, yet the world and its cares,
Would darken, with sorrow, the beautiful ray;
We are strangers;—but never my mind will believe
That aught but true gentleness breaths in thy numbers
A bosom like thine—could it flatter—deceive?
Or smile o'er the vision of vanity's slumbers?

No! pure was thy praise; for the generous mind
Which honor'd the song of my hopes and my woes,
Remember'd, that safe from the scorn of the wind
The violet may bloom in the shade of the rose.
Thy friendship's that shade, and my song the low flower
That shrunks from the gale, but expands to morn's smiling,
Yet the dew-tear of memory rests in the bower
And flows for the dreams that my youth were beguiling.

Forgive me, if yet while I bask in the beam,
To sing of the "land of my choice" I deny,
Too weak is my wing, and too lofty the theme
For a soul that is dim'd by a tear or a sigh:
Columbia! I love thee—most tender, most dear,
And faithful is Mary of Erin's devotion;
Thy glory's my pleasure, thy foes are my fear
But pardon a thought for the gem of the ocean.
